Adobe Photoshop Tutorials Closeup Tutorials Photoshop Tutorials Reviews We've compiled a list of reviews from magazines, websites, blogs and books. These reviews teach you how to apply Photoshop to a wide variety of photography, and from camera to post-production. Most of these are specialized reviews, which concentrate on a single skill or topic. This photo was taken with a point-and-shoot camera (Canon Powershot S70) in the studio environment. A landscape lens was used, but there is a lot of depth-of-field in the sky. I wanted the foliage to have more of a blurred look and a powerful contrast. I'm trying to show the vapor above the clouds. This was accomplished with layers and masks. The concept is simple — just take the top layer off everything but the subject, and then continue to build on this layer. The concept of masking is useful when you want to remove portions of the layer and then restore it. This helps you emphasize the foreground subject and blur everything else out. I began by taking out the sky, foliage and the distracting people. Next, I put the clouds layer back on top of the people layer. This gave a nice round, bluish cloud filter on top of my people, which gave an otherworldly effect. How to This is a simple step-by-step tutorial that starts with the sky and how to remove it. Next, it shows how to put a fog layer on the grass, so it could be masked and you could remove the grass completely. At this point, everything is starting to fall into place. The only thing left to do is to put the clouds back over the person's face. The concept behind this tutorial is simple: just keep working with your layers until you get the exact look you want. You start with a neutral subject. Next, you separate the subject from the background using basic levels and curves adjustments. From there you create a monochrome picture. Next, the sky gets removed and turned into a watercolor filter by using the Hue/Saturation adjustment. Next, your color images are blended together. The next step is a bit advanced, but it teaches the technique of colorizing an image in Photoshop. I started with a blue-green color. To do this, I took a color sampler and painted a sample from the color. Then I used the color sampler to create a layer over the image and painted
