For 37 patients with squamous cell carcinoma of the oral cavity who had N0 neck nodes, the presence or absence of metastatic lymph nodes was related to the character of the tumor (in situ or invasive) and the presence or absence of fistula of the floor of the mouth. In addition, follow-up to the last examination was obtained for these patients. Twenty-six of 37 patients had negative nodes. Sixteen had invasive and 10 had in situ tumors. Four of 16 patients with invasive tumors had positive nodes, 3 of 10 patients had in situ lesions. Of these patients, 3 had positive nodes but no fistula. Two other patients with in situ lesions were free of disease and had no fistula. We conclude that the presence of fistula and an invasive tumor are significant predictors of cervical involvement.October 2017 Birthdays are back to school time when we reunite with our children, grandchildren and other family members. The food table is set up with every detail in place, people are greeting each other and exchanging gifts and stories and the wine table is looking very enticing and I know some celebrating is taking place. When thinking about these celebrations, we inevitably think about our... Read More September is still full of memories. Summer vacations, getting more fit, and the beginning of autumnal celebrations. The outdoors have been wonderful this year and weather permitting, this will continue. We had a great time with our most recent outdoor outing which was the Michigan State Fair. I've been to the fair many times as a child and as a teenager, the fair... Read More Even though school has started, summer seems to linger on. We saw a few couples off to St. Louis, Tennessee and Florida on vacation. They left their young children with a couple of us and we spent the day doing things that children loved and had planned for. Our children's PTA meetings helped with the planning of their school trip, which included a scavenger... Read More
