I found a very cool method to do mobile payments and I'm really interested in using it. The only problem is that I can't seem to figure out how to make a release build that will work with my phone. The app is the default iPhone app that comes with xcode, so I don't know where to look for information on how to do this. A: The iPhone binary will not run on a phone because it isn't built for the phone. If you make an iPhone App you need to export the app as a.ipa file (app archive).

CameraMax is a free photo editor and a screen capture utility that enables you to take screenshots and edit them at the same time. It can capture the entire screen or a selected window and save the images to a local directory, a Flickr account or upload them to a Facebook account. Interface At launch, CameraMax creates an icon in the system tray area. You can use the tool without the interface, but you'll have to manually select the screen or window that you want to capture. Clicking on the tray icon opens the interface, which displays the current file name, local directory, image type and resolution. It also gives you the option to choose the image format (PNG, JPG, GIF), the preview and direct URL. It also has a tool bar with buttons to rotate, move and resize the captured image. Although the interface is intuitive, there are some things that we would like to point out: The "Preview" button should be named "Preview" instead of "Edit". It enables you to edit the current image with the image editor. This leads to a clash of buttons that looks very messy. Another thing is that the orientation of the images is not altered when saving them, which may lead to people mixing their screens/pictures. All in all, you can capture the screen or a window and save the images to a local directory, Flickr or Facebook. You can configure settings such as the file name, hotkey for capturing the screen and including the mouse cursor. Functionality The program runs on low CPU and RAM. It doesn't crash, and it didn't hang on us during our evaluation. The possibility to define an application hotkey to capture the screen should be available to everyone. You can also disable the automatic recording of video, and you may also exclude the mouse cursor. We have not encountered any issues with our evaluation, but we do suggest you keep your feedback to a minimum, as there are bugs that may arise if you use the software for a while.
