“Our goal is to create a genuine football experience that is both highly interactive and extremely realistic,” said Aaron Ramsey, FIFA 22 Producer. “We’ve leveraged years of combined technical expertise in the field of player movement to bring this to life. HyperMotion Technology allows for incredible on-field player interaction, from being able to manipulate the ball in the air to taking control of multiple opponents.” FIFA® 22 HyperMotion Technology brings added depth and precision to the ball and player physics, the most advanced ball and player AI and refined ball rolling physics. Players can now anticipate and react to the ball with more accuracy and more reactive and consistent player controls. The offside decision and goal line decision making has been improved, and users can now control multiple opponents at the same time through a variety of new dribble and tackle animations. The following video illustrates how HyperMotion Technology works: Powered by Legacy Player Data EA SPORTS Football Club Pass Players have a real life club to represent and, as a result, their club can evolve dynamically over time. The engine is built around the updated FIFA 22 Legacy Player Data system, which was developed with the goal of making all users become one club. Every Legacy Player Data member is updated in the same way – so the team AI becomes more realistic and nuanced, and behaviors created for real-life players are subsequently assigned to every club player in the game. This enables Legacy Player Data to evolve as the game plays, with club-specific goals, youth development, and contract rules impacting a club’s performance on the pitch. This gives clubs the ability to adapt, and react to game-changing events. This system is complemented by the Club Coach, Club Trainer, and Club Manager, each of which provides intelligent, real-time coaching support to the club. With the updated Legacy Player Data engine and Club Coach, Club Trainer and Club Manager systems, players are able to learn more about their clubs. For example, they can see how experienced players perform over time, the history of a player or his club. Furthermore, the Club Coach, Club Trainer and Club Manager systems all provide intelligent insights, based on the context of the game, such as instructions, advice and feedback that can directly impact the players. The updated EA SPORTS Football Club Pass system also includes multi-year contracts and offers features and benefits unique to individual club licenses.
