Apple Pay is now available to use for in-store transactions and on the web, and Apple has started pushing out the iOS 8.2 update, containing the feature. The iOS 8.2 update doesn't contain any sort of user-facing changes. It's just a bug fix release that adds support for Apple Pay, including the ability to use the service to make in-store purchases and pay for items on the web. iOS 8 users have been able to use Apple Pay at places like the Apple Store, the iTunes store, and through iTunes in the browser. By using NFC technology, you can tap your iPhone or Apple Watch to the payment terminal to pay. Now the service is coming to the U.S., and today is the first day that it will work. Apple's big event on Wednesday will be mainly focused on Apple Watch and a possible fourth iPad, but iOS 8.2 is still expected to be among the software shown off. Apple Pay is currently available for iPhone 5s and later, Apple Watch Series 1 and later, iPad Air 2, iPad Mini 3, iPad Air, iPad 2, the iPod touch 6th generation, and on an iPhone that's activated with a carrier. The iPad Air and the iPad Mini are currently the only devices that lack an NFC reader to use the service, though Apple is working on a solution for that.Q: Get the first 3 fields that satisfy the given condition in a data frame I have a data frame as follows: df 0cc13bf012
