Opioids for Cancer Pain in Children and Adolescents: an Evidence-Based Clinical Practice Guideline. Cancer pain in children and adolescents is a significant health problem, frequently undertreated, and associated with the development of severe chronic pain. Even though opioid therapy is recommended for treatment of moderate to severe pain in adults, opioids are underused and understudied in pediatric cancer pain. Opioids have now been used in the pediatric oncology population for many years, and pediatric guidelines recommend that strong opioids are a key component of effective analgesia for the management of moderate to severe cancer pain. We conducted a systematic review of the scientific literature and a consensus meeting to establish the evidence-based recommendations for the use of opioid therapy in pediatric cancer pain, including recommendations for both typical and atypical opioids. The recommendations are grounded in evidence, expert opinion, and consensus.

Composite membrane design with good compatibility for ozone-driven solid-liquid separation. The application of ozone-driven solid-liquid separation (OZSS) for wastewater treatment was investigated using the membrane separation. The highest ozone dose and the longest contact time generated by the nitrogen ozone reactor were 13.08 g/gN and 24 h, respectively. The feed solution used for membrane experiments was dissolved in deionized water. The quality of the permeate varied with the ozone dose and the contact time. The decrease of permeate quality was closely related to the ozone dose and the contact time. The permeate was dominated by the dissolved organic compounds (DOCs) and the protein-like substances, while most inorganic ions were retained in the filtrate. Three membranes were compared and the properties of OZSS membrane were further examined. The high-intensity ultraviolet (UV) irradiation, employed to enhance the structural change of the membrane, was proved to be effective for the OZSS membranes. The addition of EDTA or sulfonamide to the feed solution could increase the separation performance. The optimum membrane properties for the OZSS was a two-layer composite film; the two-layer composite film was formed by adsorption of polyethylene glycol (PEG) solution on a polypropylene separator. In the ozone-driven membrane process, the long contact time and the
