[[Correct to this (alternate) release/version]].The biosensors used to detect and/or quantitate analytes such as glucose, glutamate, lactate, cholesterol, bilirubin, and ions, proteins, and DNA are of increasing importance for medical applications. In particular, electrochemical biosensors are attracting increasing interest as a result of their ability to detect the presence or absence of an enzyme present in a sample. Solid-state electrochemical biosensors are currently available. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 5,783,353 and U.S. Pat. No. 5,798,031 describe a biosensor that utilizes a combination of three different electrodes to provide a reduced output signal. The three electrodes comprise a working electrode containing an enzyme, a counter electrode, and a reference electrode. A reference fluid is provided in the same housing as the working electrode. In another example, U.S. Pat. No. 6,617,366 describes an electrochemical biosensor that includes two reagent containing compartments disposed therein, one compartment containing a working electrode and one containing a reference electrode and counter electrode. Further, the biosensor does not include a single cover. The present invention relates to a simplified electrochemical sensor that may be manufactured using conventional manufacturing techniques. Q: How to use Bundler to install gems in a local gem directory? I have the following Gemfile: source "gem 'rails', '3.1.3' gem 'redmine', '2.3.3' gem 'mail', '2.2.15' gem 'honeybot', '0.2.2' When I run bundle install, Bundler places the gems in this directory: /home/calypso/.rvm/gems/ruby-1.9.3-p0/gems which means they'll be available to all my applications. However, it's inconvenient for me to expose this directory to users and other applications on my machine. So, I tried installing the gems in this local directory: /home/calypso/.rvm/gems/ruby-1.9.3-p0/gems/redmine And I updated the Gemfile to specify a gem path explicitly: gem 'redmine', '2.3.3' do source " end When I run bundle install, Bundler is successful and the gems are placed in the local gem directory. However, this also means they're not going to be available to my Redmine gem. Is there a way to tell Bundler to install the gems in the local directory? A: I can see no other way that installing gems into the local gem directory is not a good idea. I had the same issue in the past. The only reason why it might be a good idea is if you have local/staging servers.
