The use of constructed wetlands for treating septic tank effluent is subject to stringent regulation and oversight by local, state and national agencies, as well as the approval of any by-laws and leases obtained by their occupants. The current study examines the current use of two different constructed wetland systems; one a subsurface flow (SwSF) and the other a surface flow (SwSF) constructed wetland system for on-site treatment of septic tank effluent. Both systems consisted of eight ponds of about 3.0m width and 2.0m depth with vegetated surfaces and gravel substrates. We examined organic carbon removal, nitrogen removal, effluent mass flow distribution, hydraulic retention time and solar radiation. The SwSF system significantly reduced nitrate and total nitrogen levels in a 24h period by 66% and 53%, respectively compared to the SwSF system. The SwSF system removed 40% more organic matter than the SwSF system, and lost only 6% and 9% respectively of its mass flow during that 24h period.Friday, May 23, 2009 Go for the Turkeys Stop by your local Bamberger's this Thanksgiving to tell them you would like to participate in our Turkey Give
