I have a Raspberry Pi 2B and a Raspberry Pi Zero W. I have a 4GB SD card for the Zero. I want to use the same card for both Pis. I've tried to fit them both to the card and I can get the Zero to boot but the Pi 2B won't do anything. I've tried two 4GB USB sticks with the same result. Is this not supported? A: Yes, it should be fine to use a 4GB SD Card in both Pis. I've used both of my Pi's for 3 months with 4GB SD Cards without any issues. To my understanding, it's just an SD card -- there are no special instructions to be followed when getting into the Pi. You may want to take a look at the following article on the RaspberryPi Foundation website: Raspberry Pi 2B card installation, boot and SD card management just remember that 4GB SD Cards are much more expensive than 8GB SD Cards. астараясь не забывать: "Хорошо, но это значит, что придется моим родителям пожимать всякий раз". The ABC reports that Vietnam is the second most-connected country in the world, closely followed by Singapore and Japan. But then we cross over to the US, which is the most connected country in the world, and things immediately start to get strange: The report says that the US's position as the most-connected country is primarily due to the fact the US leads the world in internet users per capita, and the fact that internet connections are more common and cheaper than landlines. And it's all worth it. According to the report, the average internet user has spent over 50 hours a week online in the last month. Internet users in Vietnam tend to be the most active too, spending an average of 65 hours a week online over the past month. But the report says Vietnam is characterised as "a 'young' internet market". Overall, the country's "hardware and internet user penetration are both lower than average. 6d1f23a050
