Gay rights activist Alex Scott, who sued the state for releasing his identity in a child custody battle, has died of cancer at age 40, his father, Andy Scott, said in a statement. "Alex was a loving son, brother, and father to our family," Andy Scott said. "He was an advocate for LGBT people in Illinois." Alex Scott was involved in a custody battle with his former partner, Steve Wolf, who is also a lesbian. The custody case ended in 2008 when his father won custody of his son. After he gained custody, Scott filed a lawsuit seeking to fight for the right of the state's child-welfare agency to release personal information on those involved in custody battles. Illinois state law was considered to be unconstitutional at the time for preventing gay men and lesbians from seeking custody of their children. In August 2013, the family court ordered the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services to give his name and information about his son to Fox News. In July 2014, the Illinois Supreme Court dismissed the "challenge to IL Sup Ct ruling" of "the release of information," but Chief Justice Thomas Kilbride wrote an opinion in which he said that he would "most certainly" have kept it secret if he had known it was a gay man. "A child custody case is a deeply personal one," Kilbride wrote. "It is not an appropriate place for the child to learn that one of the parents is gay, is lesbian, or is bisexual." In his appeal to the Supreme Court, Scott argued that he was denied a right to privacy because he was a gay man pursuing a custody case with another gay man. The court agreed. "Alex was not just an activist," his father said. "He was an irreplaceable son, brother, and son-in-law. He will be deeply missed by us and all the friends he made. We love you, Alex."
