clocking in at less than 18 minutes, the nine songs on my favorite things are the most upbeat and dandy of the bunch, with al hirt's i love paris and cole porter's anything goes--and, as the first credit shows, the first published song of them all--foremost among them. the perfect lover is rather great (a triple-entendre, allegedly by the great operetta composer jerome kern), and the upbeat i do like to be with you is one of the few of my favorite things. and even the more contemplative lover come back to me is just a nice tune. there's even a sort of dirty-dance i guess it's you in which a man sings to his wife about, well, swinging the babe and who to. it's all very droll, and none of it's too profound. at least we know why cole porter was the world's most-recorded composer--he didn't just write beautiful songs, he also sang them with a voice as dapper as his lyric. and that's something--if my favorite things were ever reissued, the album would have to be included in any collection of cole porter's greatest hits. a- more than six years after his ill-fated but hugely influential malaika, the best of which is the way you look tonight, the genial diva joins dionne warwick and betty everett on love's not a game. at least she has had time to get better. her voice is fuller, more supple, more sensual, and more melodic than in the old days. the soft-toned ballad your choice is one of her best--and this is not a gentle song at all. words and the boogie-woogie put on your old grey bonnet aren't bad either, and i could have danced all night is about as scintillating a piece of writing as we ever got from peggy lee--and that in itself is something. love's not a game is a good album, but the album that might have been is "the way you look tonight," the one that created a slew of brilliant imitators. a maybe to some folks this recommendation will seem like a contradiction. but i don't remember it that way. after all, just because you're no longer happy with your beloved doesn't mean you can't give her the night of her life. at least in the case of the best tribute record i've ever heard. i'm not saying that montreal will delight you as much as badlands, but there will be many more wonderful moments. besides, montreal's cover is better than most of the cover tribute albums out there--if you'd expect a faithfully informed homage to a tune, don't bother, and certainly don't ask to see the original. you won't find that here, and not that's a shame--montreal is a love letter, not a shopping list. if you're in the mood for something that's a little more obvious, however, you can hear deana carter's state trooper on the box set still life, rather than the utterly pulpy cash version. a- human rights all around [warner bros., 2012] for a black act with a black producer, the reason why little-known lebanese rapper and producer medi1ne's u.s. release is entitled human rights all around is a mystery. the album's catchier, better-sung single, the hypnotic general overseer featuring the roots, is about believing in yourself enough to make even a million dollars a year--a notion that, despite the final verse's grim conclusion, is more uplifting than any of the think pieces or op-eds about the arab spring that medi1ne has proved to be even better at scoring. a-travelin' light [red house, 2009] this album is an ideal introduction to cheb khaled, though not necessarily because of the quality of the recordings, which are invariably muted and monotone. it's because, as he explains, his music is a vehicle for consciousness-raising: "i'm working on liberating people with my music." there is a lot of breathing room in this album, a lot of space between thought and sound. the only problem with the soundtrack is that it's hard to hear the voices of the songwriters, who record in autotune, but that's why the project is called travelin' light. 5ec8ef588b
