we started the company because we're friends, and we don't want to start a company just to have someone come in and offer us a full-time job when we have the ability to work on projects, even after being full-time employees for years now. our trip began as a short three days until we were invited by some friends to their place that wasn't quite how we expected. on arrival, we woke up at 6 in the morning to a chorus of moans and groans from my friends which led to the inevitable sight of a small furry white ball of fluff blissfully snoozing on their bed. cheeky, i thought. but adorable! so we spent our first day getting to grips with the very impressive house which had three reception rooms, a wine cellar, an indoor swimming pool and a fantastic garden. it was the ideal place to laze around. we had a couple of days to relax and explore with the owners before heading off to the highlands. we ventured out on our first solo excursion to a quirky place in the hills called guayabo, where the main attraction is the ride up a hill on a tiny, pull-cable contraption! i couldn't believe how fun it was for such a cheap price. until i saw the price for the one after that, on top of the hill. oops, this one didn't look the same. what makes the holland is that you get a level playing field. any race or nationality can apply and the only requirement for the client is that you are attractive. there's a fair few bars, clubs and restaurants that cater specifically to certain nationalities so you shouldn't be too worried about language barriers. most, however, do speak english, dutch, french, spanish and italian so you should be fine. hotels and restaurants etc. also cater to specific clients so you shouldn't have too much trouble.

this is the scenario my friends and i have found ourselves in. there was a job that one of our good friends was qualified for, which we thought he'd be perfect for. he was the one for it. he was starting a company on the side, and he was looking for a business partner. he asked me about it, as he knew i was fresh out of school and had my own dream of what i wanted to do. we discussed it for a bit, and we agreed that it was a good fit.

he asked me to interview the candidate that he thought would be best, which led to him interviewing the candidate he ultimately hired. a couple weeks passed and i was back on skype with my friend, and he asked me if i was still interested. i told him that i was, and he said that he'd work with the candidate that came in the next day. the rest is history. after a month of working full time, not only did my friend's company successfully launch, but he was promoted within a year. that is when i decided to start your own business.

when i graduated in 2009, i was one of the lucky 20 that got hired at a company after my last semester of school. i started working there in full time, as a contractor, and immediately started doing work from home.

by that point, i was familiar with the software, and had been able to work my way up into being my company's main helpdesk guy. i was paid a fixed monthly salary, and i got to choose what projects i wanted to do. this not only increased my skills as a technician, but it increased the amount of money i was earning from doing freelance work for my company. after a few years of doing that, my friend contacted me, and asked if i wanted to start a new company with him. we looked around for people and found that there was a need in the market for something similar to what we'd been doing. we started the company in 2009, and over the next couple of years we've grown quite a bit. last year, i decided to take the leap, and i made the switch to full-time employee. 5ec8ef588b
