If you're using a relatively recent version of NVIDIA's GeForce drivers, just right-click on the NVIDIA icon in the system tray and choose Check for updates. You can download and install the driver automatically from there. If you want to be prompted for beta driver updates, be sure to check the appropriate box in the Preferences tab. NVIDIA GeForce Rel. 179.28 Notebooks BETA - Win. Vista (32-bit) Download Pc

I have been playing around with the beta drivers since launch, and I have to say, I am very impressed. First of all, there is a Windows installer for these drivers. No dongle or anything like that (which I hate). You can either wait for the official release on July 25th, or you can get it from the nVidia installer here: <http://www.nvidia.com/download/driverResults.aspx/72716/en-us> Note: This version of the driver doesn't do SLI well with SLI enabled cards, so if you are using SLi or dual SLI in a desktop, you'll need to uninstall those drivers first (because they use the older 195.x) Now, you can either run the Windows installer from the website, or run the config tool from the standard Windows system tools. Be careful with the config tool, while easy to use, it does require admin privileges and can cause system damage, so only run it once. If you install the Windows driver first, then the config tool does no harm at all. If you installed from the config tool, then you'll need to uninstall the config tool, reboot and then run the Windows installer. This won't cause system damage, but you will need to run the config tool on a fresh install, and uncheck the box it prompts to update. Now, let's talk about the drivers. As I said before, there is a Windows version of the beta drivers (which are not 100% compatible with SLI, but the functionality is there). You can download them from the nVidia website, or you can install them through the config tool. Now, I ran the config tool, changed all the settings and rebooted. I have not actually tried the Windows installer yet. 5ec8ef588b
