If you know a calligraphy artist or a calligraphy amateur, you might be able to ask them how their making letters or asking them for information online. You can also inquire about your nearby art and craft guilds and inquire at any local or online shop. The Guild of Handmade Lettering, for example, offers a community of over 5,000 calligraphy artists from all over the world. The Art Shoppe at the University of Washington creates custom fonts for all sorts of projects, from letters to invitations, posters, invitation sets, and more. Creative environments, such as the foundry and print shop at www.thestampcrafter.com , are a great place to get some hands-on practice. All you need is a pen, some ink, and a warm place to work. And if you need to learn about all aspects of calligraphy, check out the career section of the Creative People Directory, for a chance to work in a large studio, a small one, or a home environment.

And finally, dont forget to brush up on your skills and expand your knowledge with a good introductory book on calligraphy or, if you want to build your knowledge from the ground up, buy a good calligraphy and lettering book . If youre interested in the subject of calligraphy at all, there are several spectacular books out there for you. I would recommend especially Muriel Campbells Everything Charms You, and the same author s other book Charms & Initials: Looking at Origins. A specific book which I find very helpful and interesting to work with is David Dalton s wonderful book Pen and Ink Basics. The second book I would recommend is Tracey Gibbons fascinating book A Creative Journey Through Penmanship and Calligraphy. Additional resources include Better Penmanship with Ms. Benson, as well as the first edition of Karen Y. Browne s series on Penmanship, all of which are usually available as ebooks for very reasonable prices on amazon.com. Be prepared for a lot of learning though. There is so much to be discovered if you search for it, but its not always easy to find a method that suits you best. I therefore recommend to take your time and try out different practices and techniques, there is plenty of time for learning later if you really take the time to hone your skills in the present. Keep searching, youre bound to find your own way eventually!
