Pre-release Product Keys For Windows 10 Insider Preview Won't work EXCLUSIVE

Insiders who want to update their Windows 10 PC to get the most recent Windows Insiders Preview builds can download a tool that will automatically download an updated version of the Windows 10 Creators Update to their PC, based on the initial installation of the current Insider build. While the Windows Insider Program doesn't offer a preview build of Windows 10 for Insiders, those looking to be a part of the Windows 10 Insider Preview can submit their email address to join the program. Insiders are invited to try out new features and participate in discussion and feature feedback, typically in beta via the Windows Insider Feedback Hub. Once the new Windows 10 builds are released to the public, members of the Windows Insider Preview program can download and install them. If you would like to join the preview program and receive builds, you can sign up for a Windows Insider email, and if your email address is reachable, the email will offer the ability to join the program for testing. If you have an in-place upgrade, you should sign in to the Volume License Service Center and register your PC. If you are unable to use your in-place upgrade, a reservation will be granted to you for Windows 10 Enterprise and you can sign up for the release preview and obtain a new unique product key. Once you've activated the Windows Insider program, you'll be on the Windows Insider Preview website on the Microsoft website where you can choose to install the Release Preview Channel or the Slow or Fast track. In addition to that, you can jump from the Insider Preview Builds to the full Current Branch on Windows 10 to go back to the stable build you have already installed if you wish. During the Windows 10 Insider Preview Windows 10 build window, your PC will update itself (the build number will appear near the bottom-right of your screen) and will not require any product keys to install.
