yeah, this review isn't that great. as many people have mentioned, the reviewer did seem to miss the point of spa. i can understand someone just not enjoying these machines as much as zen, but the complaints here don't focus on the aspects of the games that really matter and it sounds like the reviewer never really dug into the machines. the reviewer complains about how the machines don't have the latest licenses (licenses ultimately are the least important part of a pinball game. there are great pinball machines with awful licenses (eg the shadow) and awful pinball machines with great licenses (eg street fighter ii)) and how the games featured in spa are so much simpler compared to zen's offerings. sure, zen's games are bright and flashy, but the games in spa, especially the newer ones, have much more depth when it comes to things to do and strategies to take. gameplay is where it really counts. not to mention the fantastic thought and engineering that went into designing these games in the first place (obviously harder to appreciate in digital form, but still). also find it funny how the reviewer mentions the walking dead as something you wouldn't see here when stern actually did a walking dead machine a few years ago. hopefully it comes to spa some time. from the 00s, there's harley davidson: third edition, ripley's believe it or not!, and high roller casino. harley davidson: third edition is another table that's great for pinball newbies thanks to its straightforward, uncluttered playfield and easy-to-activate multiball, while ripley's believe it or not! dials up the level of difficulty with a myriad of ramps and targets to hit, and a complex quest system. it can still be played and enjoyed by novices, but if you're an expert, ripley's believe it or not! has some serious depth. 5ec8ef588b
