Like you have to make sure you have a compatible ROM image downloaded from the developer, as there are some fake ROMs out there that have fake boot screen or boot logos. There are some apps floating around the internet that will help you discover if you have the correct version of the firmware, and there are a lot of alternatives to GeekBuying out there, but at least you know what to look for. I do not think the running speed of the processor is as bad as a lot of people might expect. GeekBuying offers the buyers of this device to download a benchmark app from the Google Play store. They did a speed test using both Android and iOS versions of the same app, and they found the Android one performing at a speed much faster than the Android version. They did also speed tests on MHL video streaming and power consumption. There are 4 programmers; ARM, Samsung, Texas Instruments, and MediaTek, and though it seems to me the competition has held true to form, I do think there is something to be said for MediaTek. Apple has been long criticized as having no motivation but to own the smartphone space, but the company has now made good in that regard. Apple owns more patents in the smartphone space than any other manufacturer, which again, makes sense in owning more of something you sell. And owning more of something means more resources in your product. It has been quite successful in the consumer space, but now that it is starting to make inroads into the business space, the company is having to dedicate more R&D resources to the lower end of the market where the profits are higher. In the meantime, MediaTek is going on a tear and overtaking ARM and Samsung as the top chip maker in the smartphone space. The Android Developer Site has just been updated with official details on the next major update to Android, version 5.0. I haven't seen one yet but its said to be a light one and if this one comes out as promised, expect more of the same. The update will also bring unified app management across all Android devices making it much easier to make changes. Oh, and thats a major change to the OS. Will it be enough to save the company from being pummeled by Apple? 5ec8ef588b
