The individual who proved to be the most prophetic about the future of Apple's fortunes in the PC market was Rich Byerley, CEO of the PC repair firm iSuppli. In a June 13, 2007, interview with CNET, Byerley asked how many more years the PC market would last and where Apple would be in five years. iSuppli's Rich Byerley iSuppli's Rich Byerley thinks the PC market will be dead in five years. "The PC market will be dead in five years," Byerley said. "That's my assessment of where it stands right now." Byerley also noted that Apple has gone from a niche player to the "iPhone darling," and that they will move into other devices. "The iPhone is a $100, phone now, and they'll move into the next-generation handsets, and they're going to have a stronger presence in the very important tablet market," he said. "I think they're going to partner with a bigger company like Toshiba or Sony or Samsung in that market, but they will compete in PCs and in
