Although Adobe extended the x-direction and y-direction pixel resolution to allow for capture of linear raw sensor measurements, the rotation factor is still calculated as 1.0. The raw image captured with the Fujifilm X-Trans sensor doesn't have a rotation factor because the sensor itself doesn't rotate. So the files saved in extended format have no rotation, but an incorrect rotation factor. If you are using Fujifilm X-Trans images in Lightroom, the rotation factor will be incorrect, but if you have a large number of images, just change the rotation factor to 1.0 manually to correct that issue. On a Windows tablet, the default resolution for Lightroom is resized for the large screen, but on a desktop operating system, if you open the "Quality" panel in Lightroom, you can change the number of pixels that are imported into the image. Be careful, though, if you bring the resolution too high. The higher the resolution, the more data you have to process. The maximum pixel resolution available to me on a typical tablet is about 720 by 1,200 pixels. If I try to exceed that, I'm likely to get jagged or hard-edged images. It's impossible for Lightroom to understand what's going on with images that are larger than the screen, so if you try putting too much on the screen, you'll never be able to see the rest of it. The creator of Lightroom, Scott Kelby, has just announced that version 12.0.4.1 of Lightroom has been released. There are many new and improved features in this update to Lightroom, including:

- Improvements to the Lens Correction profile wizard interface
- Improved Instagram exporting
- Improved power of smart previews
- Improved Facebook photo sharing
- Better exporting for printing
- New export presets for printing
- Auto Enhance and Auto Tone Enhance now work together
- Better support for Creative Cloud Libraries, including Library Plug-ins
- Improvements to Mask (painting) tools, and Ratio/Aspect tools
- Improvements to Tone Vectors Creator and Tone Vectors Converter
- Fixed problem with Gradient Map and Tamron 17-50 f/2.8-4.5
- Fixed problem with presets for Flare filter in comment
- Minimized the number of “undone” adjustments

For technical and design professionals, Photoshop is the standard, and despite the amount of time and cost that goes into learning it, few would turn down the chance of learning all that it's capable of. On the other hand, for amateurs who want to get creative with their photos, Adobe Photoshop Elements is still the best game in town. Professionals, of course, can do all this and more with the full Photoshop application, but that comes with a high learning curve and recurring price tag. Elements makes a lot of the coolest Photoshop effects accessible to nonprofessionals. It offers a generous subset of the pro editor's features in a simpler package. Elements also offers intelligent object selection and layers, so it's perfect for working with photos containing a variety of media objects, including text, titles, frames, and logos. And because it's web-enabled, Elements is ideal for people with a PC or Mac who want to do their work on the go. You can go online and download Elements and all its built-in filters for no-cost access to a huge library of image effects. There's no need to install Elements on your PC or Mac; you can easily access the Adobe website and download the program whenever you need to edit a photo. For big projects that are best done on a bigger screen, Elements included a full-sized version of the Photoshop canvas, so you can work on a larger photograph to realize your ideas full-size. You can also make a slideshow from the individual images within a folder using the slideshow tools.

Louisiana Hall
The Louisiana Hall was a historic commercial building located at 609 North Center Street in La Grange, Illinois. Built in 1874, the Louisiana Hall was La Grange's first brick building and the only commercial building constructed in the community until 1883. It was also the city's largest building in terms of floor space. It was designed by Chicago architect Robert H.

Wentworth, and was built by George B. Newman. The brick building, which measured by and was topped by a mansard roof, had an integral office on the first floor and a retailing space on the second. The building's iron frame was clad in brick, and the entrance was a recessed porch located on the front façade. It featured an unusual white scrolled frieze and a cupola at the roof line. The building was part of the Historic La Grange Register and the city of La Grange's "Supercenter" district, which had been designated a landmark.

Ownership of the Louisiana Hall was acquired by Joseph H. Bogart in 1917. Bogart was a life-long La Grange resident that retired from the lumber industry. He redeveloped the building in 1917, when he had the building divided into two storefronts and rented it to implement his vision of Chicago architecture. Shortly after being developed, the retail building was renamed to the Louisiana Building. It survived with little alteration for over 40 years before it was demolished in 1957. The building was added to the National Register of Historic Places on November 10, 1990.
