GTA San Andreas has a new patch available and it fixes about 50 bugs. That means it's. No difference was observed in fertility treatments administered and their success, so no further clarification is warranted. In the so-called developmental environment of the 1980s, the interest in the use of assisted reproductive technology (ART) and its impact on maternal and/or paternal health was high. Couples seeking to have a child in Denmark were informed about this novel technology in a national public campaign. The offspring were born between 1986 and 1988. This presented a unique opportunity to study the health of the children born in the same period and compare them to children in other socioeconomic groups. Ritsema et al. demonstrated that inter-pregnancy intervals between the first and second pregnancies were shorter for parents of ART children, but the cohort in the current study included more than 10,000 couples treated by ART in the same period. This fact allows for more detailed analyses of the offspring of parents having completed ART. The importance of maternal characteristics and lifestyle for the risk of GDM is well known and has been demonstrated in this study and previous studies \[[@B1]-[@B3],[@B10]\]. Ritsema et al. found that a history of recurrent GDM increases the risk of GDM in second pregnancy by five-fold (95% CI: 2.3, 11.4) \[[@B10]\]. The risk of GDM in subsequent pregnancies is high regardless of prepregnancy BMI \[[@B13]\]. In the current study, however, the number of recurrent cases was too low (7.4%) for separate analysis. Few studies have examined the long-term effects of ART use on maternal and/or paternal health and studies of this kind are warranted. Chitsaz et al. found that men with multiple sclerosis had a lower probability of having children of their own if they had used donor oocytes or semen \[[@B14]\]. A first-time ART conception increased
