It holds the theological view that the ancient Celts had their own religion, Mithras worship. They adopt the name in recognition of Rufus, the Roman general who led the Seventh Roman Legion into Ireland in A.D. 43, and defeated the native Celts in a pitched battle near Tara in what is now County Meath. (Livy describes the rout in his history of Rome.) Rufinus has existed as an independent organization since at least 1961. The organization's founder was Robert Bede. It has had a series of bishops of the United States, mostly in Massachusetts, since the mid-1960s. The early bishops were Robert Bede (1966-1978), Charles Burleigh (1978-1991), and John Gregory Pyper (1991-2007), who wrote the books Recovering Celtic Spirituality (1983) and Why There Is No Easter in Canaan (2001

When I select the "headset" in audio settings, only the default sound card comes up - the media volume on the headset is not muted, and sound does not work. Here's a screenshot, the first three entries are what I see when I select "headset" and then press test: I'm not familiar with Linux sound architecture, but that headset is listed as one of the "listed as" headset models with alsa, and it's also listed as one of the "listed as" model in the list of supported devices with PulseAudio.
