The amount of force applied to the body remains low as there is no need to press the iliac wings or sacrum to achieve spinal correction, unlike in other methods of pedicle screw insertion. There are a few drawbacks with this technique; if the diameter of the pedicle screw is not large enough, it may not be possible to insert it through the pedicle. The technique does not allow for correction of the sagittal plane balance. There are a few disadvantages to this technique. The pedicle screw or rod has to be inserted into the pedicle wall, which can potentially lead to nerve root injury if it is not done carefully.
