SECT: correct formulation of the separation-of-variables problem in the case of a nonlinear equation. We consider the time-dependent case of the Blackstock-Seinfeld-Tepfer (BST) nonlinear equation, which governs the motion of an incompressible, inviscid, and isothermal fluid flow in a vertical plane. A closed-form solution for the velocity is presented, allowing for separation of variables in both the time and height variables. Using a numerical example, we show that the spatial-separation of variables is ill-posed in the case of the BST equation, and the corresponding method is unable to correctly compute the unstable periodic solution observed in the original equation. We show that this failure results from the incorrect formulation of the separation-of-variables problem. Our alternative method corrects the issue by "treating" the unstable solution as a limit cycle and then solving for the flow associated with f988f36e3a
