I'm currently developing a login system for one of my projects using VueJs and Vuex. I'm wondering what's the best practice for this kind of application. Currently, it looks like this: Login In my main component, i have a login action, which checks if a token is present in localStorage. login = (username, password) => { axios .post('', { username: username, password: password }) .then(response => { localStorage.setItem('mytoken', response.data.token) }) .catch(err => { // handle error }) } If my token is present, i send a token to the router-view and dispatch an action. commit(types.LOGIN, { type: LOGIN, payload: { user:

authentication.credentials.username, password: authentication.credentials.password } }) And finally, I update my user object in state. 04aeff104c
