Sustainability in fashion

As more and more people are being exposed to the growing environmental impact of the fashion industry, sustainable solutions are being implemented. Here, we discuss sustainable fashion design, production and the circular economy.

Sustainable Fashion in the Mainstream

Until recently, fashion was often described as a frivolous or frivolous, quite literally. But over the last years, several fashion leaders have had to start to pay more attention to sustainability. Think of LVMH, Louis Vuitton, Diesel, Versace, Dolce and Gabbana, Prada, and as more recently the Polo Ralph Lauren Corporation, Stella McCartney and most recently Burberry. They have all started implementing sustainable solutions. Here are some examples: Swedish Fashion is having a high-tech twist Textile recycling Some fashion houses have started to consider clothing as a waste material. In 2013, LVMH started its Fashion 2025 project, which will have to consider textile recycling and other high-tech solutions, such as products that can be recycled in zero-waste fashion. In the same year, as reported by Ocean Protocol, the fashion group UNIQLO estimated that its clothing contains about one tonne of plastic waste. In 2016, Adidas started with its Find Me project, which has started with a partnership with the University of Düsseldorf and Kredokar. The objective of the project is to recycle the entire life cycle of a t-shirt and the entire life cycle of a pair of jeans and develop innovative concepts for the circular economy in the fashion industry. Based on the findings, for example, the production of one pair of jeans could be reduced by half. The project will involve seven companies (Adidas, Converse, Henkels & Marcus, IKEA, Levi's, New Balance, Puma), Kredokar and the University of Düsseldorf, as well as innovation organisations such as GIZ, Innovation Fund and Helmholtz Zentrum München. Fashion is a huge industry, making up for 10% of global GDP and nearly 20% of global final consumption. Its structure has changed dramatically over the last decades. In the 1980s, textile production took up 15% of global GDP, but today it is close to 12%. Today, about one-third of textile production takes place in Asia.

China, India and Vietnam account for more than 80% of the total textile production. The fashion industry has become more competitive and consumerisation is a driving force. One of the biggest impacts of consumerisation, however, is that our
