Cell-cell adhesion molecules in developing lymphoid organs. The hypothesis that cell-cell adhesion molecules (CAMs) play a role in lymphoid organogenesis is reviewed. The unique environment of the bone marrow (BM) and thymus provides new growth factors in the form of cytokines and hormones which affect both self and non-self proliferation. The functional significance of CAMs in lymphoid organ development is also discussed. An understanding of the role of CAMs in lymphoid organogenesis may aid in attempts to stimulate thymopoiesis or induce proliferation of BM-derived cells. The wishes of recent entrants to the nursing home and nursing home health care are of great importance to families and to the care home. In this paper the author examines the wishes of residents and examines the ethical issues involved in these wishes. Using a case study, the author explores ethical issues and suggests that ethical issues arise in the admission, consultation and assessment phase in the resident's life story. The
