Keystrokes can be recorded and played back to simulate keyboard input. Basic Usage: At Windows startup, you can configure the hotkeys that should be used to simulate keyboard input. You can specify keystrokes by recording a macro for each of them. More details: Keystrokes can be recorded by clicking the Add/Edit button on the Macro Properties window. A macro can be recorded for multiple actions or for a single keystroke. You can then playback the macro in 3 different ways. The first two options are to either play all recorded macro sequences back to back, or just one at a time. The last option is to skip through all recorded macro keys in sequence. This option is useful if you want to stop the playback midway. When you playback a macro, a dialog is displayed and, on top of that, a progress bar is displayed. During playback, the macro is executed and if you want to stop playback of the whole macro, the playback dialog can be closed. This tutorial is written by Mr. Allister from Uberteach. You can find more details in his site. This is a tutorial that will teach you how to give your students back their lost writing confidence. I'm aware it's hard to find a lot of info about how to actually learn how to write well, but I can tell you I've found some real gems and these articles have helped me through a period of years when I was completely lost as a writer. It's now been almost three years and I've been self-studying and looking for something that was free and actually applicable. I've finally found something free and excellent that's not only applicable for beginning writers, but it's also excellent for intermediate and advanced writers. It's a website full of free, downloadable learning materials for writers. This is by far the best site I've found to help me get through all the self-doubt and start to get my head out of the clouds and become a confident writer again. I hope it helps you too! Topics include: Self-defeatism Are you a victim of your own self-doubt? Think of a time you've written something so bad it's embarrassing. Can you remember how you felt at the time? How did it affect your confidence in your ability to write? Self-criticism Does your self-criticism undermine your writing? Does it stop you from writing at all? What if you were 2edc1e01e8
