12-04-2008 "I feel like it's going to be a down year for me, to be honest," he said. "I'm going to see how the whole year pans out and then see what happens in the offseason. I'll have a better idea. I had a few games last year where I didn't play well, and I had to be more aware of when to take time off. I have another year under my belt that will help me a lot." With a seven-year, $35 million contract, Peralta is no longer the newest Cardinal. The Cardinals already acquired speedy outfielder Jon Jay from the White Sox on June 16 and, Peralta believes, he is not the only one who can help their team improve. "I think we have a good team," he said. "There's a lot of veteran guys, young guys like our catcher (Randal Grichuk) and outfielders (Gerardo Parra, Grichuk and Tommy Pham). They're going to be good for us this year." Grichuk and the rest of the Cardinal outfielders battled hamstring and oblique injuries during spring training, forcing Peralta into the closer role. He finished the regular season with a .225 batting average, hitting three home runs, going 14-for-57 (.248) with eight runs scored. Peralta, who signed with St. Louis as a free agent after 10 seasons with the Tigers, was ejected from three games in the final two months, including two games against the Cubs and two against the Pirates. "I was frustrated," he said. "You can see it on TV. It's not easy to have something like that happen in your life, but it's behind me." "I am always a little surprised when a new installation comes on line. It looks nice, but does not go as far as I would like in my architectural design plan. As I look at an installation, I am focusing on the effort that was put into the design, the quality of the installation, and how the site handled the impact of the installation. The more close and detailed I am to the installation, the more I am able to use the installation to highlight my design concept. I find that the less time I spend on installations, the more time I have to design. In the LA location, we used fences, walls and a beautiful broken garden wall to accent the new entrance. In
