Today marks a major milestone in our evolution as a creative software company, and the next generation of Photoshop will compete on the performance, availability, and stability of the web – which is what our customers want. In the recent versions of Photoshop, a lot of features are added to the core of the product, but it's always an issue to add too much features without an insane warning of complexity. To avoid too much complexity, Photoshop uses a feature known as "slideshows". These feature allows you to save a particular story that you want to edit, so you can then use it later. For example, in the slideshows feature, you can create a slideshow from multiple images in the Photo library. That slideshow can be edited and saved, or you can share it with others. Files can be dragged and dropped in the slideshow space directly in Photoshop, without exporting to external programs or other editing software. After saving the slideshow, you can then edit, timeline and share it through a variety of ways, if you choose so. Since Photoshop Creative Cloud version 10, the traditional version of Photoshop has been given a new beauty. With the traditional version of Photoshop, you have an overwhelming number of features and tools to give a new definition to the photo making, you can turn becoming into a busy kid of a photo editor with this new beauty.
