The Dachau concentration camp in Germany was constructed on a campground that was established in 1934. The camp was opened in March of 1933, and its first inmates arrived in August of that year, and held on its grounds up until 1945. There were two parts to the camp; the main part, dubbed the "East Zone" or, less often, the "Zone I" of the camp, and a cluster of buildings within this main area. The second part, or the "West Zone", was set up on a large, vacant plot of land east of the main area, which was not occupied by the main camp in the beginning, and only became inhabited by the camp's inmates and staff once it had been taken over in December 1941. The main Dachau camp consisted of two solid walls enclosing a roughly square area, with the two walls being approximately 550 ft (170m) in width. Published on Dec 28, 2010.
