The purpose of this study was to evaluate the effect of a vasectomy on tumor development in DBA/2 mice. A vasectomy was performed by a simple technique that involved the epididymal vein ligation and division of the vas deferens. Survival time was significantly enhanced in vasectomized mice with fibrosarcoma compared with sham-vasectomized mice (median survival 27.5 vs. 23.5 weeks). At the time of death of the vasectomized animals, the tumors had become larger and were characterized by an increased volume of the stromal/vascular component, and the tumor cells were less differentiated and more mitotically active. These findings may explain, in part, the increased survival time of vasectomized DBA/2 mice with fibrosarcoma.
