Downloadinstmankgolkes.Another 4.5 miles around Auckland's superb inner-city park and things get really exciting. It's time to skirt the city's historic landmark 'Punakaiki waterfront', before entering the 'Aotea Harbour'. Here the commercial capital of New Zealand's largest city and her hillsides bestow a truly magnificent view as you plunge into a linear labyrinth of waterways. The waterway is a much-loved, quite simply, 'other' space for New Zealanders. However, as I'm reminded constantly by the 'I've been here before, why did you click here'-looks, I struggle to remember why it's such a good idea. On the next leg, you face straight on through to Auckland's city-centre and the skyline. You turn the corner from the no-mans-land by the waterfront and as you can't face walking alongside the Greenlane and Ponsonby Road, you must take the road that meanders (at a 10 degree angle) through the deeper, most populated parts of Auckland. Those with a fully utilised mind are encouraged to read our travel insurance guide. Into The City The final leg leads you back to a familiar urban space. You face back across the famous Harbour Bridge that spans the mouth of the Waitemata Harbour, and on to Devonport, the Southern Viaduct, and the city's central business district. You emerge at the intersection of Victoria and Wellesley streets, right where you started on a sunny day a couple of hours ago. You're still in the city though. With some strong socks on and the water on your shoulders, you set yourself a relaxing aim of about five or so miles. You can decide how far you're going to walk. Getting there You can walk from the city. The form below should be used on your journey. The form can be downloaded or printed here (PDF) Overnight accommodation Optional (unless you're walking the waterfront)
