update. According to the International Organization for Standardization, "Smiley" has been on the Unicode waiting list since 2004, as the international organization was unable to reach a consensus on how many smileys to include in the 7.0 update. Besides the new emoji, the Unicode 7.0 update also includes 68 new symbols, the addition of a number of new currency symbols, the removal of several obsolete symbols and two new versions of the EBCDIC character set. Other notable additions include: $150 virtual currency slot for the Halo Reach beta test Ability to copy and paste a YouTube URL Recovery of real data from damaged NAND flash memory Countable and measurable lightness variations New font types in the EOT (Embedded OpenType) format more about the new emoji here. Update: I appear to have been misquoted.

Read the updated version of the story here. Q: C# how to include assembly from another project into same solution? I have two projects. One projects A and another project B. In A I have a method: public int sum(int a, int b) { return a + b; } In project B I try to use the same method in the same A project. This is what I tried and the failed result: In project B I created new A class library. This assembly is named as A.dll. In the A class library project I add "using A" for each method that I want to use. And then in the calling project I import the "A" using project: In the calling project I create an object of the A class like this: When I compile the project, I got the following error:
"The type or namespace name 'sum' does not exist in the namespace 'A.A' (are you missing an assembly reference?) A: Here is an example of what your expected result should look like. using System; namespace A {
